++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Slowly brightening up on Wednesday after early mist and fog.

Today:
A murky and rather damp start to Wednesday, with mist and fog in places. Some brighter interludes though and an increasing chance of warm sunny spells developing by the afternoon. Maximum temperature 17 deg C (63 deg F).

Tonight:
Staying generally dry with partly cloudy skies. In the clearer parts of Wales, patchy mist and fog will once again develop as winds fall light. Becoming chilly in the south. Minimum temperature 7 deg C (45 deg F).

Thursday:
Patchy fog on Thursday morning, this slowly clearing to leave another dry day with sunny spells. Feeling relatively mild in any sunshine given light winds. Maximum temperature 16 deg C (61 deg F).

Outlook for Friday to Sunday:
Rain pushing south on Thursday night, clearing to give a dry and sunny Friday but feeling colder. Rather cloudy but dry on Saturday and Sunday with occasional brighter periods.
